Walker Whiteside.

itre indaed is the pleasure of sceing such an artist ass Walker Whiteside. In attending "The Master of Balkatrae." at the Lyric, we forget for the moment the torment of jazz and the frivoities of the stage.

Superb hardly is the word to classify the cast. It does not give credit to the support which surrounds Mr. Whiteside. There are members who well could be entrusted with leads which call for the types of their respective characters in "The Master of Ballantrae." We remember Mr. Whiteside in "The

We remember Mr. Whiteside in "The phoon," "The Melting Pet" and in the of the classical pieces. As Baltrae, the merry rogue son of a Scothallow, a first lleutenant in the my of Dame Fortune, he has attended something different. Success ends the endeavor as one naturally pects from anything Mr. White side tries.

Befitting the partle; James Burie, elder son of the house of Durisdeer and Ballantrae, Mr. White side affects the ease and grace of demeaner of one to the manor born, yet at the times when that roving piratical spirit dominates he reverses the feeling of his lines with a finesse that is beyond mere stripning.

when that roving piratical spirit dominates he reverses the feeling of his lines with a finesse that is beyond mere gripping.

Especially in the closing scene of the second act does Mr. Whiteside rise to a sitation with admirable style and force. To strike when "there is not a point left at which to strike," he first is the ardent wooser of his brother's wife. a Romeo of gentle appeal an Othello of fire when the occasion demands. There with his vantage gained and Alison's agreement, he turns swiffly to the Lotharlo, whose dealing once accomplished, seorag the victimalions in the goal scored over an adversary attained by unscrupulous means. There are the merry hits in this stevenson play that afford Mr. White-side many opportunities for the creation of reflicking yet quite dignified comedy. In the closing moments he again rises to dramatic heights. Depressing a sit is, the climax is fraught with terseness, with a dynamic force most compelling. In truth he well "swallows sits tongue." To see Mr. Whiteside as the gentleman gambolier is to appreciate the real thesplan.

Miss Sydney Shields as the brother wife is a reader who not only places in her lines a feeling of creation but who radiates a charming personality Quite her best bit comes when as the foll for Ballantrae's advances she sways between home and the woons words of a designing lover. In handling this she justifies Mr. Whiteside's selection of an opposite.

a designing lover. In handing this she justifies Mr. Whiteside's selection of an opposite.

The Secundra Dass of Maurice Barrett gives evidence of application to this studied part. More than once he capably cares for scenes of a most unique assignment. James Macue appears for but a few moments as Colonel Burke, the Irish soldier of fortune, but his effort, especially his dialect, warrants appreciation.

A canny Scot with the anticipated traits and pecadillos of the steward is the Mr. Mackellar of Alexander Frank. Basil West lends a dignity to the character of Lord Durie, while we are the character of Lord Durie, while we are specially sold before the impetus a younger brother, Henry Paul and Jessie Broun are minor figures but well delineated by Karhle Vose and Nancye Stowart. Yes, rare indeed is the pleasure to hear Mr. Whiteside, the master of inflection and of character profrayal.

The engagement concludes Thursday with matinee and night performance.

The entertainment will be varied by the introduction of a series of dances which will be interpreted by Lillian Marion and the Nartell twins.

"The Old Homestead."

Of all the plays on the American stage, Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead" has produced more genuine laughter than any. Full of that homely comedy that never falls to register at the arare blending of pathos where you laugh one minute and wipe Christmas will soon be here. The same rush and hurry that we promised ourselves to avoid will seen find some of us again right in the midst of it, unless we make early selection of our Christmas gifts. Remember that crowd of tired and cross shoppers, willing to accept anything. that jammed around you at the last minute last year? Conditions promise to repeat themselves.

Why not change that situation this season? Use care and thoughtful judgment, select gifts leisurely, now, that will be treasured for years as remembrances of value and usefulness.

The Electric Novelty Co., on Mon-ree avenue, near Second street, is displaying many wonderful and con-venient electrical household devices. Every conceivable new invention is represented. There are washing mahines, vacuum cleaners, dainty per colators, chaffing dishes, grills, toast-ers and boudoir lamps, ranging in price from $2.50 to $175.

The experts in charge of selling these devices at the Electric Novelty

Co. are thorough electricians. And it is advisable to purchase electrical household devices from men who are thoroughly competent and understand electricity. The service which may later be required, just like an auto-mobile, is something which everyons will appreciate, if their electrical household devices are purchased from an electrical device dealer.

Think of the convenience of just turning on a button and starting the day's work or toasting bread at the table in the morning. Electrical de-vices are practical, useful gifts. And what greater gift could be given to mother, wife, sister or sweetheart, if you lighten their daily tasks, or for instance, make the toilet easier if they have an electric curling iron. you desire to inspect an array of the wonderful new appliances elec-tricity has made possible, see the dis-plays at The Electric Novelty Co.'s salesrooms, 123-125 Monroe avenue. It is said this organization of singers rank as the best harmony quartet now before the public. Augustus Pitou, Inc., is bringing this wonderful play to the Lyric Friday and Saturday and Saturday matinee.

Literary analysis shows that one of Shakespeare's principal qualities was his understanding of human nature. This same quality is possessed by Geo. Kelly, the actor, who is showing much originality and eleverness with his pear. Kelly's writing so far has been confined to one-act plays. He is the author of "Finders-Keepers' and "Woman Proposes," both unique comedies. For his new vehicle, however, he holds the public pulse. He has hit upon a subject that at some time or other has possessed most everybody's mind.

Somebody once asked, "Where do all the actors come from?" They come from everywhere, from exclusive society, from the kilchen, from every, profession and every business, from the catter caned the case progressed. At frequent intervals her tears became uncontrollable, but a kiss from her husband quieted her each time.
